Deborah Masters: Activist & Artist

Much is known about the activist but few know that apart from her role as an environmentalist, Deborah Masters is also an established artist. Trained in the fine arts at both Bryn Mawr College and the New York Studio School, Masters has been exhibited throughout Europe and the United States, including the Whitney at Phillip Morris, the Brooklyn Museum and several New York art galleries. She has 11 major public art projects already to her credit and is working on several more.

Masters is currently exhibiting a culmination of work at the Smack Melon Gallery entitled "Lost and Found Souls", in which she explores the very human need to connect with something/someone greater than themselves. Stemming from the lack of an operating elevator, (mainly a sculpture artist working with very heavy materials), the exhibit is a series of mixed media

Curated by Kathleen Gilrain, the exhibit at Smack Mellon, located on 56th Water Street, DUMBO (gallery hours: Wed. - Sat. noon to 6pm) will finish its run on October 6th.
